Read the following passage and answer the questions given below:

The fundamental question must now be raised: 'Why do people engage in conversation for conversation's sake?' The reason cannot be that they look upon the affair as a very bright entertainment, for most conversers are only too obviously happy when time arrives for breaking up the party. It cannot be because they feel an overmastering desire for information concerning friends, because, even if such desire existed, it could be stated in ten seconds. Nor can it be because they feel an overmastering desire to impart information concerning themselves, for such a desire, which usually exists in some degree, could be satisfied in ten minutes, and they will stay on long after it is satisfied and even stated. Nor can it be in order to kill time, because they could get far more fun out of the worst book ever written than they could get out of the average pow-wow.

Arnold Toynbee said about Ramakrishna that 'his religious activity and experience were comprehensive to a degree that had perhaps never before been attained by any other religious genius in India or elsewhere'. You will hear only echoes of such words if you go through some recent works on Ramakrishna published in the West. What is most important in all works for the dissemination of Vedanta philosophy in its bearings on the idea of universal religion is to affirm, without any reservation, that this ideal does not touch any religion as it exists but only urges a universal approach to all religions. By universal religion, Vivekananda meant this mingling of faiths and he thought it was Vedanta, particularly Advaita Vedanta, which could bring about this mingling of spiritual tunes in a grand harmony of faiths.
