6	Comprehension	Read the following passage and answer the questions given below: The twelfth century stands out as a lively and creative age in Western Europe, whether it is judged by great movements (such as the rise of new architecture, of universities, of a multitude of literary forms and kinds in the vernacular) or by its results in some tiny detail, as when it gives new life to the dry bones of a fable that had been chewed unprofitably for centuries before. What happy combination of circumstances unlocked this abounding vitality it is impossible to say. But one aspect is suggested by the history we have just traced. Preceding ages always had before them the model of Rome in her days of greatness. Those who cared for literature imitated the Latin classic; and by using a dead language and the forms and subjects of a past civilization, they cut themselves off from the mass of people.
	Question Description	Which of the following statements best captures the sense conveyed in the passage: (i) Twelfth century stands out irrespective of its great movements or by its results in some tiny detail. (ii) Twelfth century stands out notwithstanding its great movements or by its results in some tiny detail.
