1	Comprehension	Read the following passage and answer the questions given below: Britons are such poor conversationalists...If it has been raining hard all day, first Briton says on meting the second Briton: 'Very wet!' You would have thought that the second Briton would have left this remark alone, to stand up by itself...But not a bit! The British code demands that second Briton should reply, and the second Briton always does reply: 'Yes, it is, isn't it?' The preliminary skirmish being thus over, and the fact being firmly established that continuous rain does indeed constitute a wet day, first and second Briton both reflect desperately: 'what the deuce can I say next, I wonder?'
	Question Description	The phrase 'British code' in the passage implies -----.
	A	social convention in Britain
	B	Criminal Law in Britain
	C	Social propriety in general
